Policy Statement

Northstar prohibits unlawful discrimination, harassment, sexual assault, and retaliation. Employees are expected to treat one another professionally and may raise concerns without being required to confront the person involved. Reports will be reviewed promptly and handled as consistently and fairly as circumstances allow.

1. Conduct Prohibited by This Policy

Discrimination or harassment based on a characteristic protected by applicable law is prohibited. This rule applies to conduct by employees, managers, executives, applicants, customers, vendors, contractors, visitors, or other people encountered through work. Prohibited conduct may occur in person, in writing, electronically, during travel, at company events, or in any other work-related setting.

Examples include unwelcome sexual conduct, offensive comments or images, slurs, threats, intimidation, repeated unwanted contact, or other verbal, physical, visual, or digital conduct that violates applicable law or creates a prohibited work environment. Sexual assault is prohibited under all circumstances.

Retaliation is also prohibited. No employee may be punished, threatened, isolated, denied an opportunity, subjected to increased scrutiny, or otherwise treated adversely because the employee made a good-faith report, requested an accommodation, participated in an investigation, sought help, or exercised another protected workplace right.

2. Reporting a Concern

Employees should report suspected discrimination, harassment, retaliation, or other conduct covered by this policy as soon as reasonably possible. Employees do not have to report a concern to the person involved and do not have to follow the normal chain of command when doing so would be uncomfortable or inappropriate.

A concern may be reported to an immediate manager, the Director of People & Administration, the Chief Operating Officer, or another executive leader when the concern involves one of the designated contacts. Managers who receive a report may not promise confidentiality or attempt to resolve the matter privately outside the established process.

3. Management Responsibility

Managers are required to notify People & Administration promptly when they receive a complaint, observe conduct that may violate this policy, or otherwise become aware of a concern that may require review. A manager may take immediate steps to protect safety or stop ongoing conduct, but should not conduct a separate investigation, interview witnesses on their own, or reach conclusions before the matter is assigned for review.

4. Review and Investigation

People & Administration will assess each report to determine the appropriate response. Depending on the issue, the organization may implement interim safety or work measures, preserve records, identify relevant witnesses, review documents or electronic information, and conduct interviews. The scope of the review will be based on the nature of the concern and the information reasonably available.

Information will be shared only with people who need it to evaluate, investigate, respond to, or document the matter. Absolute confidentiality cannot be guaranteed because some information may need to be disclosed to conduct a fair review or take appropriate action.

At the conclusion of the review, Northstar will determine whether corrective action, process changes, training, coaching, discipline, or another response is appropriate. The reporting employee will be informed when the review is complete to the extent appropriate and legally permitted.

5. Protection From Retaliation

Retaliation concerns should be reported immediately using any reporting option listed above. Northstar may take interim steps to prevent retaliation while a matter is under review. Employees are expected to cooperate with anti-retaliation measures and may not attempt to discourage another person from reporting or participating in a review.

6. False or Bad-Faith Reports

Northstar does not discipline an employee merely because a concern cannot be substantiated. However, knowingly making a false report, intentionally providing false information, destroying evidence, or interfering with an investigation may result in corrective action.

7. Records and Policy Availability

People & Administration will maintain records of complaints and reviews using appropriate confidentiality and retention controls. This policy will be provided at hire, kept reasonably accessible to employees, and redistributed when materially revised. Employees with questions about this policy should contact People & Administration.
